Tara Duncan and the Spellbinders

By Scooby2

Tara Duncan and the Spellbinders is a wonderfully written book that will appeal to all ages. I thought it was a great first book for the series. The story starts out with Tara, who has always known she's different. Only her two friends, Fabrice and Betty know what she can do. Her world is turned upside down when she overhears her grandmother on the phone. Tara is sent to the OtherWorld for protection from the Blood Graves and is able to see just how different she really is. She is a powerful spellbinder, but has not been taught anything about spells because of a blood oath her grandmother did with Tara's father. She meets up with some new friends and an old friend. The Royal Castle where she will be staying is alive and has ever changing illusions on the walls, ceilings, and floors.

Tara is able to see just how different the world she knows really is. There are spellbinders, nonspellbinders, elves, dwarves, giants, unicorns, imps, vampyrs, goblins, gnomes, trolls, demons, and so much more.

Tara is able to grow throughout the story and has to face many difficult challenges with her friends. She will also discover more about her parents and why the Blood Graves are after her; and face betrayal from someone she trusts.

I LOVE IT

By Bookwyrn

This is now my all time fav book up there with Eragon by christopher paolini, harry potter, and arrows of the queen by Mercedes Lackey. I hope those who buy it enjoy it as much as I did.

For older people (probably 20 something who want a complicated plot) maybe look somewhere else, as (this was pointed out by my mom) everything is just a little bit too easy for the main characters.

Spellbinding and Bonding

By Yvonne

My six year old granddaughter is quite a reader already. We watch Tara Duncan on TV and it is one of her favorite characters so I decided to buy her her first grown up book (with no pictures and 470 pages no less). We are reading it together and I made her a special bookmark to leave in the page where we stop reading for the day. This is a great experience!
